

R&I system development

Low- and middle-income countries often lack access to scientific advances which high-income countries take for granted. The resulting disparity can be bridged by strengthening research for health and innovation systems in-country, facilitating choices that are relevant to their local context and not imposed by donors.