

Web4Development

COHRED's Web4Development group comprises highly qualified information system engineers and programmers who work to make accessible information management systems and tools for low- and middle-income countries to collect and analyse data in the research for health and innovation fields. COHRED has developed a powerful platform that countries are already using, Health Research Web, which enables countries to manage their own data, sort information quickly, and see at all times the status of their research for health. Entirely managed by the country partners, data is uploaded and updated by the country partners and institutions themselves. Our team, based in Brazil, also dedicated to using the Web for Development, and databases that can be used for data mining, to help decision and policy makers develop policies and practices that are based on solid data.
